The Sen's Leve.

- Once is the days of old.

 In the years of youth and mifth.
 The was as a lover bright and bold.
 And he tored the polices earth.
 The sub in his royal tailment clad.
 Lover her and found her sever.
- Ah! that the backs should sing.
 And wall for the golden years;
 Love was and is not an ide thing,
 The backs wind that years.

- And such in her bessety and pride.

 Held her itps to the wooling sea.
 He said. "Those are fair, oh, my bride."
 And see sang. "I am thine simms."
 The mithath sea at her failtness fact.
 Rotted with a broken mount
 (b), smn! he cried," but thy bride is sweet.
 And I am alone, stiene?"
- Ah! that the bards abould sing. And wall for the golden years; Lone was and is but an idle thing, 'Tis but a wind that yeers.
- Oh would the wan depart, And his bride in her gloom made mosm, And his service for this her living heart Standy be left to give about. And the colors is strange and set and sweet, """ in a most wither not mixed."

 I assume next to he as the feet.

- I are content to its at thy tert, And to been thee in storm and shine,"
- Ah! that the bards should sing, And wait for the guiden breats: Less was and is but an active thing. The but a wind that were. T.E. Wentherby.

 There is a picturesque story going about London to the effect that Mr. Carlyle was a tetrible donestic tyrant. Mr. Yates says that at breakfast time the Soutch phylosopher would exuse down grambling and glancing at the well-spread board, declars the food to be untit for a dog. Mrs. Carlyle thereapon would order the servant to take the despised viands back to the kitchen. Presently, when the philosopher was beginning to grow despectately hongry, his spouse would order the same dishes to be brought back, which her husband manediately proceeded to devour with infinite relish and without any more adv. No wonder that the sage considered his wife a greater woman than either George Sand or George Eliot.

 The popular belief as to the comparative shallowness of the Pacific ocean may heve to be medified by soundings made with what is known as Sir William Thompson's steel wire, and which show that along the cutier coast of California a depth of 1,500 fathoms or more is reached within a distance of from twenty to seventy miles westward from the shores, the greater part of this sudden fall occurring in the last ten to fifty miles. At 100 miles west of San Francisco the bottom is found to be 2,500 fathoms deep. The bad of the ocean containes of a uniform depth greater than 1,500 fathoms until the Sandwich islands are meached, the greatest depth, 5,005 fathoms, at a Like fathous until the Sandwich islands are reached, the graniest depth, 5,005 fathoms, at a distance of about 400 miles sest of Honoluin. That great depth is maintained until within ninety miles of Honoluin; at fifty miles from that place the depth is 1,000 fathoms.
- That great depth is maintained until within unsely miles of Honoicine; at fifty miles from that place the depth is 1,000 fathoms.

 Gen. Grant has explained how he became attached to a cigar. When at West Point he tried to join other cadets in smoking, but the experiment did not agree with him, and he did not form the helat, nor did he begin to smoke much until he began fighting the battle of the war. Engaging in all the early contests, he found a cigar of some service in releving the mental strain upon him, and when a battle was in progress he often had a cigar in has mouth, but still he was not an inveterate marker. On other occasions he probably did not smoke so much as most men of modern indulgence. To his engries he found the newspapers making a point of his smoking, and very soon butes of excellent eigers began to arrive a his beadquarters from all parts of the country. There were so many that all officers attached to his immediate service were supplied, and with such a supply he nesisted in sampling until, as the campaign went on, he enjoyed his cigar on all occasions, and has since smoked as much as the best of men. He thinks the newspapers influenced him a great deal on the tobacco question.
